THE STOLID CHINESE.

He dan Sleep and Work All in the San It seems to make no particular differ-ence to a Chinese how long he remains in one position. He will write all day like an automaton. If he is a handicraftsman he will stand in one place from dewy morning till dusky eve, working away at his weaving, his gold beating or whatever it may be, and do it every day, without any variation in the monotony and apparently no spe-cial consciousness that there is any monotony to be varied.

In the same way Chinese school children are subjected to an amount of con-finement, unrelieved by any recesses or change of work, which western pupils to the verge of insanity. It would be easy to expand this topic alone into an essay, but we must pass it by, merely calling attention to a remark of George Eliot in one of her letters.
